

At the beginning of my graduate studies, which ultimately led to this book, I experienced two breaks in family continuity: the deaths of my mother, Mary Ukadike, and my only brother, Patrick Nordi Ukadike. I dedicate this book to them.

Contents

Acknowledgments	ix
Introduction	1
1 Africa and the Cinema	21
Information and Entertainment Media in Black Africa before the Arrival of Cinema	21
Some Early Contacts with the Cinema	29
Western Images of Africa: Genealogy of an Ideological Formulation	35
Banishing the Exotic: Toward a Positive Image?	48
2 Francophone Origins	59
General Trends and the Problems of Development: An Overview	59

The Indigenous African Film Production 68

Med Hondo and Ousmane Sembene: The Schism between Theory and Practice 90

3
Developments in Anglophone Film Production 105

Working for the Decolonization of the Picture 105

Â

page_vii

---

Page viii

The Battle of the Frames: Film, Television, and Bureaucracy 108

The Formation of Independent Cinema in Ghana and Nigeria 126

Ghana: Contrasts in Ideology and Practice 130

Nigeria: Paradox of Mediocrity? 141

4
The Cultural Context of Black African Cinema 166

Post-1970 and the Introspective Phase 166

Oral Tradition and the Aesthetics of Black African Cinema 201

Film and the Politics of Liberation 222

5
New Developments in Black African Cinema 246

Contours of an Emerging Trend: Toward a New Cinema? 246

Narration, Transgression, and the Centrality of Culture 250

Toward the Tradition and the Centrality of the Paradigm 288

6 Conclusion: Whither African Cinema? 304

The Present Situation 305

The Question of Aesthetics 308

Notes 313

Selected Bibliography 343

Index 357

Â

page_viii

Page ix

Acknowledgments

This book would not have been possible without the numerous encouragements that sustained my effort. I thank the following institutions and persons for their contribution. The University of Ibadan, Ibadan, Nigeria, graciously granted me leave of absence to pursue research. I am indebted also to Mypheduh Films, Washington, D.C., and its proprietor, film director Halle Gerima, for access to the collection of African films, critical reviews, and production notes. Med Hondo, Kwaw Ansah, Gaston KaborÃ©, Ngangura Mweze, and many other African filmmakers shared their thoughts and feelings with me. I would also like to thank June I. Givanni of the British Film Institute, California Newsreel, and the University of Michigan (the Office of Vice President for Research).

I am grateful to the following journals for granting me permission to use previously published materials: The Black Scholar for "Western Film Images of Africa: Genealogy of an Ideological Formulation"; Film Quarterly for "Yaaba"; Jump Cut for "Anglophone Media"; and UFAHAMU and Afterimage for portions that appeared in these publications. I am humbly grateful to the late Professor Jay Leyda, who was supportive of my ambition to pursue this project. He was able to read only the proposal, the introduction to this work, on his hospital bed and was hoping to read the book before he was called to his final resting place. His concern for clarity and creativity sustained the completion of this study. I am deeply grateful to friends and colleagues for their support: Richard Porton for his invaluable suggestions and perceptive

Â

page_ix